

THE NORTHWEST'S FINEST ORGANICALLY GROWN

LENWOOD FARMS

Brad Bailie and Esther Daza
Near Connell, Washington

The Lenwood Farms land has been in the family since the early 1900s, originally owned by Brad Bailie's great-grandparents. Brad began farming in the late '90s, officially taking over production in 2003. After promoting sustainable farming practices with a non-profit agricultural and community development organization in Guatemala, he was inspired to convert his farm land to organic. Brad and Esther are passionate about farm tours and working with people from various cultural backgrounds to develop solidarity within their community.

Balance with Nature

Brad and Esther have been working with agricultural researchers to find better ways to control pests and weeds by incorporating insectaries on the farm. Bringing balance to their natural surroundings by promoting ecological diversity is an important aspect of their farming philosophy. It's a continual learning process, but Brad and Esther are always looking for new perspectives that improve sustainable farming practices.

"I love having people visit my farm, because I can learn so much from other people's perspective, knowledge and experience."
